Renowned poet to teach at Concordia University

MONTREAL, May 26, 1978 -- Daryl Hine, the Canadian poet who has made an enormous impact on American letters, will teach at Concordia University this summer.

Praised by New York Times critic and poet Daniel Hoffman as a "virtuoso performer", Hine has written five volumes of verse and one novel, The Prince of Darkness and Company.

Born in Burnaby, B.C., Hine, 42, was educated at McGill University and at the University of Chicago where he has held teaching posts in English.

Hine's topic for the summer lecture series, running from July 6 until August 16, is American poetry from 1912 until 1977.

Another summer lecturer this year will be John Moss, whose book of literary criticism, Sex and Violence in the Canadian Novel, will be the topic of his course.

Moss, formerly the editor of the Journal of Canadian Fiction, has also been associate professor of English at Concordia. He now teaches at the University of British Columbia.
